

THE RISING PASSION STONE IN DEATH.
—Old Billy B., of Bennington, Vermont, was a man whose life cannot possibly be found in Pioche. When very young, his friends were expecting an early demise, his nephew and a man hired for the occasion had butchered a steer which had been fattened; and when the job was completed the nephew entered the sick room, where a few friends had assembled, when, to the astonishment of all, the old man opened his eyes, and turning his head slightly, said, in a full voice, drawing out the words:

"What have you been doing?"
"Killing the steer," was the reply.
"What did you do with his hide?"
"Left it in the barn; going to sell it by-and-by."
"Let the boys drag it around the yard a couple of times; it will make it weigh heavier."
And the good old man was gathered to his fathers.

There is a firm at Pioche City which does Democratic editorializing in the only paper published in that place, which is Republican, by coupling them with advertisement of its business and paying for them. It is rather startling to take up the last number of the Union, for instance, and read: "The last of the Democratic report is that Grant has not yet appointed a successor to S. P. Chase as Chief Justice. He is probably waiting for a present, or bribe. It is said that 'every man has his price.' Grant's price is $50,000. You don't recover from your surprise until the next sentence informs you that — grocers, have only one price for their goods, and that's a low one."

The State founded by William Penn, though it never claimed to be so orthodox as Massachusetts, has always insisted that its history throughout the colonial period, and especially during the revolutionary era, was quite as illustrious as that of the more austere Commonwealth. Penn purchased lands of the Indians under treaties, but accused the Plymouth Pilgrims of stealing theirs, and then hanging the owners if they complained; and though his followers did not keep Sunday very strictly, they were never guilty of the cruelty of whipping their older barrels for working on that sacred day.

It is noticeable that in the United States in 1870, there were only 302 deaths by suicide, while there were only 302 by lightning; in other words, one is as likely to kill himself as lightning is to kill him.

All men whom the Graphic Company have invited to go up in their balloons, Robert Collier is the only one honest enough to give fear as a reason for refusing.
